Man held in attack on father-in-law

HAIFA — A Carmel man was remanded in 15 days' custody Monday on suspicion of stabbing his father-in-law.

Police told Chief Magistrate Miriam Verinsky that the suspect, Moshe Reider, stabbed his wife's father, Yitzhak Amar, on Saturday night. Amar's 13-year-old son, Binjamin, who tried to intervene, was also stabbed. He and his father were taken to Rambam Hospital, where they were reported out of danger last night. (Him)

JERUSALEM POST REPORTER

TEL AVIV — The Association of Former Soviet Prisoners of Zion has called a mass outdoor seder Thursday evening, in solidarity with those Jews still imprisoned in the U.S.S.R. because of their desire to emigrate to Israel. The seder is scheduled for 7 p.m. at Kikar Me'achal Yisrael.

Shortage of matza at start of Pessah

Jerusalem Post Staff

A last-minute rush on stores and supermarkets, substantial rises in prices, shortages in some commodities — notably matza — and heavy traffic on the roads marked the beginning of the week-long holiday of Passover, which started Monday night.

Stores were crowded up to closing time Monday afternoon, and a shortage of matzot was reported from various parts of the country. The shortage was most marked in some parts of the Dan Region, especially in Tel Aviv, as well as in Beersheba and other southern towns. Shortages were also reported from Haifa. The Ministry of Commerce and Industry has instructed bakeries to continue baking matzot throughout the holiday week, so as to catch up with increasing demand and to prevent any further shortages and possible price increases.

By the time stores were about to close, shoppers were charging last-minute shoppers' exorbitant prices. Chickens, for example, hit a record IL5.50 per kilo, compared to IL5.50-IL6.50 last week. Tomatoes also climbed steeply to IL5.50 from last week's IL4.

The Habad movement's "Matza for the Hungry" campaign ended Monday, Erev Pessah, with the arrival at Beit Hanassi in Jerusalem of a delegation from the Lubavitcher Rebbe in New York. The Rebbe sent three matzot shomerot (unleavened bread produced and baked under close supervision) to President Zalman Shazar. The "Matza for the Hungry" campaign, held to celebrate the Rebbe's 71st birthday, saw 71,000 portions of matza distributed to public figures, army officers, hospitals, youth centres, kibbutzim and new immigrants.

Traditional seder ceremonies, retelling the exodus from Egypt, were held in homes as well as at the large hotels and institutions. There was no seder at the Western Wall this year, but public sedarim were held at the newly renovated synagogues of the Old City, nearby. The Jerusalem Municipality held a public seder at the Yehonatan Synagogue.

IL 100,000 afikoman

The central army seder in the army took place Monday night at the base of an Armoured Corps brigade in the Golan Heights, with the participation of Defence Minister Moshe Dayan; Chief of Staff David Elazar; the O/C Northern Command, Aluf Yitzhak Hafi; and Chief Chaplain Mordechai Piron.

A young officer who managed to "steal" the afikomen received, in return for it, a promise from Rav-Aluf Elazar of a IL100,000 allocation to be used for construction of a gymnasium for the unit.

The army played host to hundreds of tourists at seder ceremonies in various army bases, in a project it undertook for the first time, in honour of the State's 25th anniversary celebrations.

lic seder for pilgrims at the Yehonatan Ben-Zakal Synagogue and arranged others at some of the larger restaurants for the needy.

During the intermediate days of the festival, starting this morning, the Municipality will sponsor free walking tours of the city's historic sites. The tours, led by professional guides, will leave Jaffa Gate at 8:15 a.m. each day.

The seder at Kiryat Arba, the Jewish quarter of Hebron, was led by Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren, who took part earlier in prayers at the Machpela Cave.

Special sedarim were held in Tel Aviv by the Labour Council and by the Religious Council for new immigrants, tourists, single people and the underprivileged. The same was true for Haifa, Herzliya, Ashdod, and many other towns. Among the guests at these sedarim were hundreds of Russian immigrants for whom this was their first seder ever.

"Second sedarim" were held last night for the thousands of tourists who have arrived in Israel this week to celebrate Passover, and many families played host to non-Jews among the thousands of Christians who arrived for Easter.

The two days preceding the Eve of Pessah saw some 60 special flights added to those regularly scheduled — 25 of them by El Al alone. Hotels throughout the country reported full or near-full occupancy, with many of those in the big cities and resort centres reporting 100 per cent occupancy. Despite Monday's heavy schedule at the airport — more than 80 flights landed — traffic moved smoothly, with no mishaps reported.

Among the arrivals at Lod Airport Monday were three planeloads of Russian immigrants from Vienna. Nearly all the newcomers were transferred immediately to absorption centres or waiting apartments, and many went on to spend the seder with relatives.

Ten cruise ships bearing Christian pilgrims are scheduled to dock this week, in addition to the Queen Elizabeth II, which brings 600 American Jews.

Tourism medal for Kibbutz Ein Gev

EIN GEV — The 30th annual Ein Gev Festival opened last night with a show entitled "The Kibbutz in Song and Dance".

Tourism Minister Moshe Kol awarded the country's first Silver Medal for Tourism to the kibbutz, handing it to Ya'acov Steinberger, who has been the festival's director for all its 30 years. He also declared the event part of the Israel Festival, to be called henceforth the "Spring Festival".

The weather was mild, and the amphitheatre was packed. The audience included Deputy Premier Yigal Alon and Eladut Secretary-General Yitzhak Ben-Aharon. The Israel Broadcasting Authority's Symphony Orchestra performs at the festival tonight, and the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra appears tomorrow night with a changed programme, due to the tragic death of guest conductor Istvan Kertesz.

Israelis take to roads for Pessah holiday

Jerusalem Post Staff

Thousands of Israelis took to the roads Monday — some travelling to be with relatives for the seder, others choosing to go camping or to spend the holiday at a resort site.

But despite the heavy traffic all over the country, no road deaths were reported by last night.

The unusually heavy traffic in Tel Aviv caused cars to advance at a bumper-to-bumper pace, and there were many snarl-ups along the way. Yesterday morning, too, the roads leading out of town were full, with many families leaving for a day's outing.

The national parks and roadside camp sites were crowded, as were all the municipal parks in the Dan region, including the Yarkon Park and Ramat Gan's National Park. Many families were seen equipping themselves with tents, tables and chairs, babies' playpens, folding beds, portable gas ranges and charcoal broilers, and set up camp under the trees. In many of the parks there was singing and dancing, as some of the families engaged in private celebrations.

There was a steady stream of traffic to Eilat and southward yesterday, as holiday-makers headed for camping sites around there and in Sinai. The beaches south of Eilat were seen filling up with coloured tents, and all the hotels and private rooms in the city were full yesterday, as ideal spring weather attracted both Israelis and foreign tourists to the Red Sea beaches.

Rain forecast for yesterday did not materialise, but fear of it apparently discouraged some of the travellers who might have crowded the forests and parks in the Galilee — as they traditionally have on Passover. The nearby Jezreel Valley, however, was full of visitors, who also crowded the kibbutzim and hotels in the area.

Soviet police scatter Jews after service

MOSCOW (AP) — Uniformed Soviet police dispersed several hundred young Jews from the steps and sidewalk of the Central Synagogue after Passover services Monday night.

Most of the Jews who had stayed after the services were young, and when two lines of police herded them up or down Arkhipov Street they went slowly, singing "Hava Nagila" defiantly and out of tune.

The police operation was commanded by a stocky lieutenant colonel who tried to shout above the singing: "Move along. Move along. Quickly." Another policeman used a portable electric bullhorn.

A metal fence had been thrown up across the street to block off a vacant lot where in previous years members of the congregation gathered.

The overflow from the synagogue was kept perched precariously on the three-metre sidewalk as the cars went by.

At regular intervals of about six minutes a squad car moved past, and a policeman inside it announced over the car's loudspeakers, "Be careful. The traffic is dangerous."

When the service ended, most of the older people in the congregation hurried home without the usual gossip outside the synagogue.

The young remained, crammed on the steps and on the porch of the synagogue dancing the hora as they sang.

Record supply of carp bought for Passover

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — Fish breeders marketed a record quantity of 520 tons of live carp for the first day of Passover, three times the usual weekly amount, and nearly 200 tons more than the previous pre-holiday supply.

It is believed that the demand was so high because carp is now one of the cheapest foodstuffs, the price unchanged at IL3.50 per kilogram, because of an increased government subsidy, while meat and fowl prices have gone up drastically.

The Fish Breeders Union secretary told The Jerusalem Post that sufficient stocks are available to supply all demands for the Sabbath and the last day of Passover.

The union also increased its pre-Passover shipment of fresh carp on ice to Britain from the usual ton to two tons.

Dubitzky almost upsets 3rd-seeded Australian in tennis competition

By JACK LEON

Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV — Israel's veteran racketeer Gabriel Dubitzky yesterday came within an ace of pulling off a dramatic upset-victory at the annual Passover International Tennis Championships here, when he led Australia's No. 1 junior Paul Kronk 6-4, 4-1 at the Maccabi Club courts here. However, the unseeded 35-year-old Dubitzky finally ran out of steam against an opponent less than half his age, and the third-seeded Australian finally got home 4-6, 7-5, 6-2 in this first-round match.

Play resumes today at 1 p.m. at the Maccabi courts.

The former Israeli Davis Cup man, who has a reputation as a "fighting" player and has achieved some wins against many foreign players over the years, shook Kronk, 18, with his powerful serving and exceptionally error-free tennis on his home courts. But he finally tired after breaking back in the 10th game of the second set to level at 5-all, amid great excitement from the full gallery.

Carmel Haifa's Shmuel Dank also got off to a great start in his match against Australian Michael Hewitt, taking the first set 6-4 in impressive style. Hewitt, formerly Victoria's second-ranked junior, then found his touch, to win the next two sets 6-3, 6-2.

In contrast, comfortable straight-set victories over local opponents were achieved in first-round contests by No. 1 seed Iosel Santelu, Romania's third-ranking player, and Australians Mark Cocks and Phil Martin. Steve Stefanski, of the U.S., has still to make his bow in the tournament which started on Monday and continues until April 22. Israel's champion Yehoshua Shalem, seeded second, and fourth seed Yosef Stabholz also won in two sets. Shalem beat Gavriel Wolf 6-2, 6-0 and Stabholz topped promising junior Danny Goldberg 6-3, 6-2.

Among local participants, a centre of interest yesterday was Lithuanian tennis champion Felix Kaplan, who arrived here less than a month ago with a group of new immigrants from the Soviet Union. Kaplan, 27, who is now a member of Israel's Davis Cup squad preparing for next month's tie against Holland here, looked very sharp as he defeated former Israeli junior champion Zally Reshef (Lazorewsky) 6-1, 6-2.

In the annual Passover National Junior Tennis Championships at Tel Aviv's Maccabi Tzafon courts, top seeds Kalovsky and Wertheimer yesterday reached the finals of the major boys' under-18 singles, coming through in straight sets against their respective opponents Sher and Zoref. The boys' under-16 event has also gone according to form, with the first two seeds Glickstein and Sher reaching the last round. Under-14 finalists are S. Puni and Stempo.

Ronit Heller yesterday added the girls' under-16 title to the under-10 crown she won earlier in the eight-day meet edging out highly promising Tami Levin — who has only been playing tennis for one year — by 7-6, 7-5 in an excellent final which could have gone either way. The junior championships end today, with play starting at 8 a.m. at the Tzafon courts.

FREIGHT RATES CONTINENT ISRAEL CONTINENT CONFERENCE LINES

The provisional freight increase of 10%, effected on January 1, 1973, proved quite insufficient to meet actual cost increases. This position has meanwhile been further aggravated by recent drastic increases in export dues and stevedoring costs, to name only two items.

Therefore, the Lines of the Continent Israel Conference are compelled to increase all rates in the traffic to and from Israel, as from July 1, 1973. The exact increase will be announced in due course.

Bormann will 'make public appearance'

LONDON. (Reuters). — American writer Ladislav Farago has predicted that Martin Bormann would make a personal appearance before the end of 1973 to convince the world he is still alive.

Mr. Farago, a former U.S. intelligence officer, made his forecast when interviewed at his Connecticut home for a filmed documentary shown on commercial television here about Bormann, Hitler's deputy.

On the official West German announcement last week from Frankfurt that Bormann died in Berlin on May 2, 1945, and that his skeleton had been identified, the author declared vehemently: "I consider it a major scandal and I will do all in my power to discredit it. I say he is alive and is in South America."

Mr. Farago, whose own published version on Bormann's whereabouts in Argentina has been heavily questioned by Nazi hunters and others, said that he is editing Bormann's memoirs — the German having accepted an offer of $500,000 after asking for twice that sum.

"The memoirs are genuine," said Mr. Farago. "They are in German and are very dull." He said that extra notes and material had been obtained to give more substance and make them more readable.

The author went on: "On the basis of the evidence I will be able to furnish conclusively in the end, the case will be reopened and Bormann declared alive."

He said that the evidence would be Bormann himself. The appearance would take place "wherever he is" before the end of this year and through certain professional connections, Mr. Farago said.

4 Tulkarm men held in attempt to rape 2 tourists

KIFAR SABA. — Four young men from Tulkarm were arrested here Sunday evening, following the attempted rape of two tourist girls from a nearby kibbutz.

The girls told police they were walking along the Kfar Saba-Ramat Hakovesh road when the four suspects came up from behind, grabbed them and dragged them into an adjacent citrus grove. One of the girls managed to escape and called the police, while the other girl was allegedly gagged by the attackers and had her clothes torn off. She was not raped, however, because she fainted and the four men were frightened and ran off.

A police patrol car caught the four suspects as they were fleeing. Police said they admitted attacking the girls and led the investigators back to the site of the crime. (Him)

Frenchman can't leave without son

ASHKELON. — The District Court here has issued an injunction barring a temporary resident from leaving the country — unless he takes his four-year-old son with him.

The order was issued at the request of the Ministry of Welfare against Gerard Choukroun, 30, of Ashdod. The Ministry said Choukroun arrived here from France without his estranged wife and put his young son in a foster home. They added there was reason to believe he might try to abandon the child and that his exit from Israel should therefore be barred. (Him)

Golda to decide whether to retire 'in few weeks'

Prime Minister Golda Meir has promised to announce "in a few weeks" whether she still intends to retire from office after the October election.

In an interview with the Mafpan newspaper "Al Hamishmar" Mrs. Meir said: "Whatever I say will sadden someone. If I say yes (I will stay on) it will certainly be an unhappy occasion for some. If I say no, it will sadden my best friends." But she added: "A few more weeks and the 'great tidings' will come..."

In the wide-ranging interview published Monday, Mrs. Meir dealt with all of Israel's major problems. She said she could not say when peace would come, but that she was convinced it was not a territorial problem, but a problem of the Arabs refusing to recognize Israel's existence. "We always agreed to every compromise, true or not true," she said.

On private Jewish land-buying in the administered territories, Mrs. Meir said she was chary of the idea from the start. "The Shaprio plan would have been for control (of purchases), full of clauses and conditions. With heavy heart I thought, well maybe... but in the course of two weeks I reached the conclusion that what I feared would happen in a far worse manner... that Jews would run and buy, including Jews from abroad."

Mrs. Meir also made these points: • On "Newsweek" columnist Stuart Alsop's contention that Mrs.

'Al-Quds' editorial: Israel 'misunderstood' sorrow on Fatah dead

Pictured in the front-page banner headline story in Saturday's issue of the Jerusalem Arab weekly, "Al-Fajr" (The Dawn), which reported that the Israeli raid on Beirut was preceded by a meeting between Jordanian and Israeli intelligence chiefs in Elilat. The front page carried a black frame in mourning for Kamal Nasser (shown) and the two other Fatah leaders killed in the raid.

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter Jerusalem's leading Arab newspaper "Al-Quds" yesterday rejected Israeli criticism of the wave of local Arab sympathy for the three Fatah leaders killed in Israel's raid in Beirut last week. It claimed Israel "misunderstood" the Arab reaction in the administered territories.

"Al-Quds" said "it is true" that Fatah leaders Kamal Nasser, Mohammed Youssef Najjar and Kamal Adwan "were in struggle against Israel." But the sympathy for them "was not necessarily an aspect of reflection of that struggle," the paper said.

"Al-Quds" argued that Arabs in the administered territories mourned them because of family ties and their common background. (All three were from towns and villages in the territories.)

The newspaper said sympathy for the Fatah leaders was far from being an expression of hatred for Israel.

On Monday, two editors of the Jerusalem Arab weekly "Al-Fajr," Joseph Nasri and Jamil Hamad, were remanded for 15 days. They were detained Sunday for interrogation over a number of allegedly uncensored stories, one of which quoted a "pro-Palestinian" Jordanian intelligence officer as saying Israeli and Jordanian intelligence had a meeting in Elilat shortly before the Beirut Operation. "Al-Fajr" mourned the three dead Fatah men as "martyrs of Israeli-Jordanian collaboration."

The two editors are said to have denied to police the authenticity of the story, but they are reportedly still being interrogated over their newspaper's work. Jordan called the collaboration claim "completely unfounded" and accused "Al-Fajr" of serving Israeli intelligence.

Jordanian Information Minister Adnan Abu Odeh charged that Israeli intelligence inspired the story to cause tension between Jordan and the West Bank, and that Israel then arrested the editors to lend an aura of authenticity to the report.

In an interview on Amman Radio, Abu Odeh also alleged that the terrorists endorsed the story in order to cover up their failure in the Beirut raid.

The Libyan leader also spoke of the battle against administrative routine and urged the people "to trample with their feet" any bureaucratic office that fails to meet their needs.

"The revolution of Libya starts today," he said. "The last three years were to prepare the people to take over authority."

He also urged the formation of "popular committees" in every village, town, school, college and firm to put into practice his five-point programme.

The programme calls for suspension of existing laws and introduction of new ones, implementation of Islamic thoughts, distribution of arms, purging Libya of "political sickness," and revolution against routine.

Year in jail for drug possession

TEL AVIV. — A local resident was sentenced to a year in jail Monday for possession of hashish and opium.

The man, Haim Malka, 32, was caught on December 6, with 282 grams of hashish and 32 grams of opium. District Court Judge Hanna Evenor said the quantity of the haul indicated he may have intended to sell the drugs—although he contended they were for his personal use. (Him)

Sadat's threat to resume battle may shut off Arab oil to West

By DAVID LENNON
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

LONDON. — Washington's highest policy makers are taking Egyptian President Sadat's threats to resume open warfare by means of a military "shock" quite seriously, "Newsweek" reports this week.

They are well aware that Egypt would be reduced to impotence in a matter of hours by Israel, but they believe that Sadat hopes that a shutting off of Arab oil to the West during the resumed battle would give him political leverage, according to a report by Arnaud de

Borchgrave in 'Newsweek'
Sadat's threat to resume battle may shut off Arab oil to West

Borchgrave who has just returned from a visit to Cairo where he interviewed Sadat.

The American officials concede privately, the report continues, that there is little the U.S. can do to head off a resumption of hostilities. In a curious way they also no longer seem adverse to such an explosion which might have a "salutary impact." It is a sad fact of Middle Eastern life today, an official is quoted as saying, "that a political settlement does not seem possible without a major crisis first."

The major crisis of which he is speaking is the shutting off of the supply of oil to the West. This could come either from the official policy of leaders such as Libya's Gaddafi and Saudi Arabia's Faisal, or through some action of the Arab terrorists.

Faisal has warned Washington on three recent occasions that the Egyptian President is not bluffing this time. Moreover, in the event of new fighting, Faisal said, Saudi Arabia would have to join its fellow Arab states in a "gesture of solidarity with Egypt," presumably a cut-back of the oil flow to the west.

Faisal pointed out that if the kings and sheikhs did not halt the flow of oil, then the tens of thousands of Palestinians employed in the oil fields would almost certainly do the job for them. These warnings by Faisal have been taken seriously in the upper echelons of the Nixon administration.

The American war games men are now taking seriously the possibility that the terrorists would take the opportunity of "renewed hostilities" to sink a supertanker in the Strait of Hormuz at the entrance to the Persian Gulf.

De Borchgrave claims that he was told on excellent authority in Cairo that such a contingency plan had indeed been discussed between Sadat and Gaddafi.

With a tanker going through the strait every 10 minutes these days, it is conceivable that Palestinian frogmen could clamp limpet mines on a couple of hulls in the dead of night — or even hijack a supertanker and blow it up, thus choking the strait. This would further squeeze the world's oil jugular since 90 per cent of Japan's oil and 60 per cent of West Europe's is moved through the Strait of Hormuz.

The resultant uproar among the nations dependent on Middle Eastern oil would — Sadat seems to believe — compel the U.S. to push Israel into making significant diplomatic concessions to the Arab side.

In other words, the Israelis may well win the battle Sadat is cooking up, but it is the political aftermath that he is counting on to make gains for Egypt.

In a footnote, the report notes that Henry Kissinger is not likely to take over any role in seeking Middle East peace. He is not a man to undertake a diplomatic mission that does not have a reasonable chance of success, and there is no such chance in the present situation.

The American war games men are

P.L.O. man said ordered to leave Italy

ROME (Reuters). — A Jordanian said to be a former member of the Palestine Liberation Organization, who was arrested for stealing a car last month, has been given four days to leave Italy, his lawyer said here yesterday.

Mohammed Adib Sadat Salem Hussein, 31, and another Jordanian, Taleb Talab el Jabbari, 43, were arrested near Como and later transferred to Rome for questioning about the death of an Egyptian near the Colosseum in February.

Their lawyer, Felice Salvetto, said Hussein had been released from jail Monday and ordered to leave the country. El Jabbari was being taken under police escort to Trieste near the Yugoslav border, where investigations are going on into the sabotage last August of a major oil depot, for which the "Black September" organization claimed responsibility.

Police said both men formerly served as terrorists under PLO leader Yasser Arafat, and they were investigating a possible link between Hussein and the slaying here last October of al-Fatah's Rome representative, 36-year-old Wail Adel Zualter.

Meir demands world action for Shkolnik

Prime Minister Golda Meir called on world opinion Monday to put pressure on the Soviet Union over the 10-year prison sentence imposed on a Russian Jew who applied to immigrate here.

Mrs. Meir said the sentencing of Yitzhak Shkolnik "is not only a blow to him, but a blow to many others who fear even to think they might like to come to Israel."

A Soviet court convicted Shkolnik of having contact with "Israeli agents" after the prosecution accused him of working for British intelligence. The trial was closed to the public.

Mrs. Meir said Shkolnik "wants to live in the country of his people. He's accused of being a traitor, of being a spy; and when they can't prove it, they say, 'Well, we haven't found any proof of it, not written and not in any other way, but we know what you think.'"

The Prime Minister said public opinion "against this injustice" is "the only thing the Soviet regime is sensitive to. In Stalin's day it wasn't so; but this regime, I think, takes public opinion into account."

10 STEN SUB-MACHINEGUNS and ammunition were stolen from a municipal storage room in Rishon LeZion Saturday night. Police said the weapons had been stored there since before the Sinai Campaign, when the threat of attacks by terrorists necessitated a nightly watch in the town. Several suspects have been detained for questioning.

COUNCIL DEBATE EXPECTED TO LAST ALL WEEK

Arab diplomats expect full-scale U.N. review of Middle East crisis

UNITED NATIONS (Reuters). — The Security Council's current debate on last week's Israeli commando raids on Beirut and Sidon will almost certainly be followed by the first full-scale review of the decade-long Middle East crisis since 1967, Arab diplomats here believe.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Hassan e-Zayyat, who flew to New York to take part in the Council's deliberations, said on Monday his country would seek the review — including a full report on the mission of U.N. peace envoy Gunnar Jarring. The Jarring mission has been at a standstill for the past two years.

"The Council and the world it represents have certainly the right and the duty to know whether peace efforts in the Middle East have reached a dead end," e-Zayyat said.

He called on U.N. members — particularly the U.S. — to halt all military and economic assistance to Israel.

Arab diplomats said they expected the Council debate on Lebanon's complaint over the Israeli raids to continue for the rest of the week. Immediately afterwards, the Council would probably initiate a thorough review of the Middle East situation.

The last time the Middle East was put under such close scrutiny here was in November, 1967, when the Council produced Resolution 242.

The sources said the Council might then adjourn for about three weeks, to allow time for Dr. Jarring, Sweden's ambassador to Moscow, to draw up a report. The 15-nation body would reconvene to discuss the report and decide what action to take next.

Only two of the five permanent members of the Council delivered substantive speeches up to Monday — the Soviet Union and China. While both support the Arab cause, they spent much of Monday's four-hour session accusing each other of betraying the true principles of Leninism.

The U.S. representative, John Scali, spoke only briefly at the start of the debate last Thursday to refute what he called "big lie" allegations that the American government was implicated in the Israeli raids.

Arab delegates have been working on a draft resolution condemning the Israeli incursions. Its terms have not yet been disclosed here, although the authoritative Egyptian newspaper "Al-Ahram" said Egypt had asked Council members to approve a draft condemning Israel for the forays into Lebanon and calling for a pledge to desist from future military action. The draft was being worked out this way to avoid a possible U.S. veto should it include any proposal to expel Israel from the U.N., the newspaper said.

Dr. e-Zayyat predicted that there was little chance of adoption of any resolution calling for coercive measures against Israel as long as there is a veto and that veto is left to the Government of Israel.

"The Council and the world it represents have certainly the right and the duty to know whether peace efforts in the Middle East have reached a dead end," the Egyptian Minister said, adding: "Certainly we all have the right to know where the responsibility for the present situation lies."

Dr. e-Zayyat was less critical of the U.S. and its support of Israel than many diplomats expected. But he observed that it was "unbelievable that Israel continues to receive an ever-increasing and massive military economic assistance from the United States."

Israeli ambassador Yosef Tekoahe rejoined that the world and Israel were weary of listening to Egypt and other Arab states "involving one-sided resolutions" which brushed aside legitimate Israeli interests.

Arab hijackers appeal sentences

BLANTYRE Malawi (AP). — The Malawi Supreme Court of Appeal will hear the appeal on April 24 of two Lebanese sentenced to 11 years imprisonment with hard labour for hijacking a South African Airways Boeing 727 airliner in May 1972.

Fouad Abu Kamel, 47, and Aja Georges Yaghi, 43, were found guilty on three charges. Kamel is appealing against the severity of sentence and Yaghi against the conviction. Yaghi claims he was wrongly convicted.

"What is this talk of coercing Israel to give up its legitimate rights to self-defence and to live in security?" he asked. "Has not Egypt learned the lesson after 25 years, that the use of force and coercion cannot be effective against Israel, not after what its people have had to go through to regain and defend its independence?"

Mr. Tekoahe urged Egypt to end support for "the nefarious aims and activities of the terrorist organizations" and begin talks with Israel.

Monday's angry slanging match between the Soviet and Chinese delegates caused the Council president, Peruvian Ambassador Javier Perez de Cuellar, to observe that while members had been "enriched in their knowledge about many matters," there had been no great contribution to "order and clarity."

Chinese Ambassador Huang Hua accused both the U.S. and Russia of maintaining the "no war, no peace" situation in the Middle East and asserted that the Soviet-initiated resolution in the General Assembly last year on the non-use of force was a "reactionary theory" which tied the hands of the Arabs struggling to recover their lost territory.

Soviet Ambassador Yakov Malik rejoined that China and Israel had joined forces in a "duet against the Soviet Union." Russia had proposed sanctions, the expulsion of Israel from the U.N. and new talks among permanent members of the Security Council to promote a Middle East settlement, and he demanded to know what was China's attitude on these points.

"All right, Mr. Chinese Delegate, you accuse the two Super-Powers — well, help the Council with your ideas," he said. "Let us pay some attention to Dr. e-Zayyat. Let us apply sanctions against Israel."

He said there was "a lot of anti-Soviet talk and slander" in the Chinese remarks, but "nothing behind it." Malik went on to speak in derogatory terms of the Jews, drawing from Mr. Tekoahe the protest that the debate had been turned into a "political agitators' meeting in Moscow."

"No one has forgotten that the state which takes up so much of the Security Council's time with the kind of absurdities about international behaviour we had to listen to today is the only member state around this table which has ever been expelled from an international organization," as the Soviet Union was expelled in 1939 by the Council of the League of Nations," the Israeli envoy said.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Bray urged the Security Council to take a balanced approach in dealing with Lebanon's complaint. He appeared to hint the U.S. might veto any resolution it felt was too one-sided against Israel.

"Our hope is that the Security Council will look carefully at what it would call the problem of the use of violence in the area and that the Security Council would find it possible to take a balanced approach," Mr. Bray said. "For our part, the U.S. Government would certainly be receptive to any initiatives in the Council which we could consider constructive and truly balanced."

Amnesty ends 3 Boeings 'knock hole' for Moslems in Philippines

JOLO, Philippines (AP). — The Philippine Government has abandoned its amnesty policy and the armed forces plan a drive to wipe out Moslem rebels demanding secession. Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Romeo C. Espino said yesterday.

Espino said, "President (Ferdinand) Marcos has bent over backwards granting amnesty, but there will be no extension. If the rebels want to fight we will let them fight."

He spoke to military and civil officials in the Sulu Provincial capital of Jolo, 961 kms. south of Manila, two days after the latest amnesty deadline expired. He said the insurgents had not responded here or in trouble areas in Zamboanga, Del Norte, Zamboanga Del Sur and nearby Basilan Island.

While Espino spoke, army mortars and a navy gunboat were blasting intermittently rebel concentrations on heights overlooking the airport 3 kms. away within sight of the briefing room.

'Argentina won't be anti-Semitic,' Campora says

BUENOS AIRES (Reuters). — Argentina's Peronist President-elect has assured Jews here his Government will not be anti-Semitic, a Jewish organization revealed yesterday.

The Delegation of Argentine Jewish Associations published a note it received recently from Dr. Hector Campora, 64, who is due to take office May 25.

It said: "The Justicialist (Peronist) Party does not distinguish between people according to their religion, race or origin." The note said such distinctions were never made by the originator of Peronism, ex-President Juan Peron (now 77 and living in Spain), during his rule from 1946 to 1955.

Terrorists shoot at former home of Jordan envoy

WASHINGTON (UPI). — A New Zealand diplomat said Tuesday shots were fired into his home Sunday apparently by a Black September group in the mistaken belief he was a Jordanian diplomat.

Gerald C. Hensley, charge d'affaires of the New Zealand Embassy, said his residence had earlier belonged to a Jordanian diplomat who left the U.S. two years ago.

Hensley said the assailants painted a sign on a wall of the house in red letters, reading "There will be a homeland for all or a homeland for none. Death to the Zionists and their functionaries. Black September group."

Many Danish Jews 'marry out'

THE first statistical-sociological survey of the Danish Jewish population states that three out of every four Danish Jews now marry non-Jews. This is reported in the "Jewish Chronicle." The survey is by a young Danish Jew, Jacques Blum. Published in book form, it is based on interviews in depth with 250 Danish Jews, and took three years of work.

Three years ago there were 5,500 Jews in Denmark. Since then about 3,500 refugees have arrived from Poland, but only about half of these intend to stay permanently. Only about five per cent of Danish Jews live outside Copenhagen.

Although intermarriage has grown to such a large rate, the overall figure shows that 57 per cent of married Jews have Jewish partners. About five per cent of the community observe kashrut strictly; 12 per cent do not observe the dietary laws. Almost half the Jews go to synagogue on the Day of Atonement and one-third fast. Hanukkah is observed by 48 per cent but a greater number celebrates Christmas.

Half the Jews of working age are in salaried employment and 30 per cent are independently employed (as against 10 per cent for the population as a whole). On the other hand only 10 per cent of the Jews are in unskilled occupations, as against 35 per cent for the total population (a situation that is familiar throughout much of the Jewish world). More Jews receive higher education. Almost a half of those questioned considered themselves Danes; 41 per cent Danish Jews; and 12 per cent "Jews" (the last including many Israelis living in Denmark).

Information on Scandinavian Jewry is also contained in an article by Sidney Du Broff in the "Hadassah Magazine". Writing about Sweden, he says that about half of the country's 15,000 Jews live in or near Stockholm. He finds that in general religion does not play a prominent part in the country — and the Jews are no exception in this respect. His estimate of intermarriage is 30-40 per cent. While anti-Semitism is virtually non-existent, there is a feeling that the hostile New Left and Arab propaganda could make anti-Semitism into a mask for anti-Semitism.

ONE RABBI

The only active rabbi in the country is a 35-year-old American, Morton Narrows, who has attended both Orthodox and Conservative seminaries. He arrived without knowing a word of Swedish but now preaches in the language. He reports that there are no "Jewish neighborhoods" and the Jews are scattered over vast areas so that even coming together requires great effort.

There is an important Jewish centre in Stockholm which is not religiously oriented but presents a full Jewish programme. It attracts about half the city's young Jews. Over 100 children go to the Jewish Day School. Some of the young people have been busy producing pamphlets on Jewish life in Sweden, on the Middle East, and on Jewish topics. They actively distribute these, for example, during left-wing anti-Israel demonstrations.

Other sources, concerned with the future of Swedish Jewry, speak of its isolation and have asked for world Jewish help in sending teachers and youth leaders, and by inviting young Swedish Jews to international Jewish gatherings in other countries, especially Israel. There are those who are concerned at expressions of self-hatred among assimilated Swedish Jews and even feel that there is a positive side to intermarriage in ridding the community of the more assimilated and thereby leading to a more homogeneous, healthy and active body.

REFUGEES

Over recent decades the Swedish community has taken in many Jewish refugees. In 1932 there were only 6,000 Jews in the country; during the War, the numbers reached 19,000. Hungarian refugees were welcomed in 1956, and more recently some 3,000 Jewish refugees have arrived from Poland. The Polish refugees were supported by the government for six months and were helped to study Swedish. After six months, the Jewish community has been helping, for example, in providing loans to purchase housing. The newcomers are, however, very different from the old-timers and have not integrated into the community. This, however, was also true of the previous waves of refugees — the course of time got over initial friction to become integrated members of the community.

Du Broff also writes about the small Jewish community in Norway. In 1939 there were less than 2,000 Jews in Norway (including refugees from Germany). More than half died in World War II. After the war, 600 Jews from D.P. camps were allowed into Norway but many of these eventually left for North America or Israel. Today there are less than 1,000 Jews in the country with about 750 in Oslo and 250 in Trondheim. There is no rabbi in Norway, and as those Jews who would like one would wish him to speak Norwegian, there is little likelihood of finding one. Norwegian Jews are in commerce and the professions. The dozen or so Polish refugees who have settled in Norway are not practising Jews. Intermarriage is high here too. A few groups meet in the Jewish community centre but its activities are poorly attended. There is some elementary Hebrew education for children but the teachers are not professionally qualified. Strangely, Jews are barred from teaching in the general elementary schools. The Norwegians claim that this is not due to anti-Semitism but exists because Lutheranism is the state religion.

The community in Trondheim is the most northerly community in the world. Their synagogue is a converted railway station (which would not be so surprising to anyone from England where the leading Victorian synagogue architect was also a noted railway station designer — and the two are sometimes indistinguishable). The Trondheim synagogue differs from the usual railway station by having a miqveh in the basement. The community has a cantor who teaches the 30 children.

FINLAND

Finally, a note on Finland where there are about 1,750 Jews including 1,300 in Helsinki and 350 in Turku. According to Du Broff, its Jews are affiliated with the synagogue, however loosely. There is anxiety over the decreasing numbers of the community and some of the young people are leaving for Israel. There is no immigration — and because of its delicate position vis-à-vis the U.S.S.R., it could not take in refugees from the Soviet bloc. Mixed marriages take a heavy toll, although the non-Jewish partner (usually the bride-to-be) sometimes becomes Jewish.

Doubtless the community will dwindle — but then there is often an overoptimism regarding the immediate Jewish future. I have on file an article written about the Jews of Finland in 1963, which reported a Jewish population of 1,400 and said that there were those from Laurence Olivier as the 1 of Wellington, and Ralph Riel son as King George IV.

Scandalous Caroline

AFTER doing the screenplay for such successes as "Lawrence of Arabia" and "Dr. Zhivago," Roy Bolt makes his debut as a writer in "LADY CAROLINE" (Lamb, Limor, Tel Aviv). His Sarah Miles, plays the title role in this British production.

The scandalous "Caro" was wife of English statesman William Lamb (later Lord Melbourne, Queen Victoria's first Prime Minister) who is played by Jon Finch. She had a tempestuous affair with poet Lord Byron (Richard O'Brien). The wayward, unattractive Lady Caroline was rejected by aristocratic society of early 19th century England, because she had its hypocritical code of behavior. She refused to be discreet about her affair, forcing society to take notice instead of looking the other way as it would.

But, in spite of taking liberties with the historical fact, Bolt has a disappointing piece, with melodrama and staged scenes. This, in spite of the dial often being trenchant and particularly in the beautifully-scene of the House of Commons debate.

However, while the story is not convincing, the background certainly is. The director has used several of England's "stately homes" for his local with great effect. In addition, players all look absolutely natural in their colorful period dress.

While Sarah Miles tends to act, good performances come from Jon Finch and Richard O'Brien, as well as John Mills as the British Foreign Secretary and Margaret Leighton, in the role of Lady Caroline's mother. Lady Melbore there are also superb vignettes from Laurence Olivier as the 1 of Wellington, and Ralph Riel son as King George IV.

TODAY'S deals from international competition, while interesting as double dummy problems, required the most careful analysis to be made in actual play.

South: ♠ A K Q J 10 9 8 7, ♥ A Q J 10 9 8 7, ♦ A K Q J 10 9 8 7, ♣ A K Q J 10 9 8 7

The bidding: South 1♣, North 1♥, East 1♠, West 1♠. All Pass.

The defence took the first two tricks and continued diamonds. Declarer had to rely on the suit. He could afford to lose one ♠ and one ♥, but he had no entries into his hand unless... On the third ♠ lead from West the ♠ A was discarded from dummy! After winning the ♠ A the declarer lost the ♠. The declarer then won, in dummy two clubs, two hearts, the ♠ K, and exited with a ♠. East had no choice but to lead to the established ♠ J and the good clubs in the South hand. 3 NT made.

The ♠ K was led. If either the ♠ A or the ♠ K is outside there is no problem in making the contract. West surely does not have the ♠ A and the ♠ K, otherwise, since he is marked as having had the ♠ K, Q he would have made a competitive bid. Declarer worried about the danger of losing three hearts. A ♠ finesse to arrange for the discard of a losing ♠ seemed too risky. With only one sure entry into the dummy what should be South's play from dummy after winning the ♠ A? A safe way to make the contract was found. After winning the ♠ A declarer entered dummy with the ♠ A, and led the ♠ 9 from dummy! If East played either the ♠ Q or the ♠ Ace South would be assured of losing only two ♠ tricks and making his contract. East played low and declarer played the ♠ J which lost to the ♠ Q. The return of a trump by the defence would be throwing away a trick. West returned a ♠ to East's ♠ A. ♠ was led. Declarer won with the ♠ A, foregoing the finesse, and safely ruffed his losing ♠. ♠ 4 ♠

Modernization in French wine and cheese industries THE MACHINES MOVE IN

By ALINE MOSBY

ARBOIS (UPI). — PASTEURIZED wine? Machine-made cheeses? The modernization of old France influences the one-time hand-made delicacies of this storybook village in the Jura mountains.

Any vision a traveller has of great vines aging in dusty barrels in caves vanishes when you pull into the town of 5,000 to see American-style billboards proclaiming the wines of Henri Maire.

Maire visited California wineries to learn how to apply mass market methods to the Arbois region where his family has been making wine since 1832.

Maire, 55, organized grape growers, planted new fields and built a modern glass-and-steel winery where the traditional wooden wine presses are used only to hold flowers in the lobby. Computers keep track of the clients of his vast $10 billion a year mail order business.

The Maire wines are pasteurized, a bow to Louis Pasteur who lived in Arbois. This being France, Pasteur conducted his famous bacteria experiments on wine, not milk, right on that hill behind the vineyards," Maire said.

In Paris, the National Wine Committee says "Pasteurization usually is reserved for little ordinary wines for mass sales." But Maire scoffs that "this legend that wine to be good has need of bad medieval style surroundings is destroyed forever."

To promote the pasteurized wine, the Henri Maire Winery takes visitors on tours of the wine plant and then to see Franche-Comte cheese made in modern factories in the snow-covered Jura Mountains behind the vineyards.

In the mountains, one Comte Cheese factory still is a family affair where the Gruyere-like cheese is made by hand following the custom of centuries. The milk is curdled in big copper vats. A black cat was sitting atop one during our tour.

Workers scoop out the butterfat curds in cheesecloth and form them into a round wooden mould. After a salt water bath, the moulds are slapped onto storage shelves to ferment for four months before going to food stores.

At the more modern cheese factories in the mountains, the milk curdles in cutting-high vats that the workers cannot tend by hand. The curds are taken out in metal forms by more machinery and trundled on a mechanical assembly line to fermenting store rooms.

A spokesman for the Dairy Farmers' Cooperative that is pushing the mechanized cheese factories complained that "with handmade cheese, each cheese from each village tastes different." Is that bad? "Yes," he said. "We are trying to standardize the cheese so the quality always will be the same."

The only hazard of these wine-cheese tours is that the Henri Maire people insist you taste 25 different kinds of wine and as many cheeses. The town's leading restaurant, Tavernes De La Finette, serves a nine-course meal featuring Cheese Fondue, the specialty of the region. The rustic Hotel De Paris with beamed ceilings offers double rooms for around $14 (devalued).

New chance for Ofra

By JUDY SIEGEL
Special to The Jerusalem Post

OFRA'S black eyes beam with pride when, after wrestling with a difficult problem in long division, she finally gets the solution. She is one of the 110 disadvantaged children participating in Mifal Kai, a new educational and recreational programme sponsored by the YMHA in Jerusalem. The 10 to 12-year-olds were chosen from five schools in the neighbourhood of the Katamonim.

Home to Ofra is a two-room flat, bare of books and toys, whose only amenity is an ancient radio receiver. Her mother, who emigrated from Iraq in 1950, spends most of her days and nights caring for her husband, bed-ridden mother and seven growing children. When she is not busy cleaning and cooking, she worries that she cannot pay her bills or that her children will be ruined by their environment. "I don't want them to be cleaning women or unskilled labourers all their lives, but teachers, electricians or carpenters," she says with felling, but with the air of someone who is dreaming.

KNOWS PROBLEMS

The Iranian-born coordinator of Ofra's educational programme, Uri Ben-Zion, knows the problems of the youngsters he is trying to help. "Because there is little intellectual stimulation at home," he explains, "their vocabularies are small, their imaginations stunted. The schools are usually not geared to deal with the learning disabilities of these children. We supplement the schools. We look for the children's strong points and, in an informal setting and on a personal basis, try to build them up."

WEE WOMEN

"Want a piece of the action?"

Twice a week, 50 high school volunteers tutor their young pupils in Hebrew, English and mathematics. The tutors are given free membership in the "Y" but for many that is not the prime motivation for helping. Orly Lindner, whose cherubic face makes her appear younger than her 14 years, speaks with the maturity and dedication of the teacher she aspires to become. "Many of the boys and girls are smart and can be useful to their country, but because their parents are poor they don't have the chance. I have learned here how to communicate and be friends with them and if I can teach just one thing they didn't know before my work will be worthwhile."

SOCIAL SKILLS

When the books are closed and the pencils put aside, the children are encouraged to join the "Y's" social and recreational programmes: music, arts and crafts, swimming, basketball, ballet, city trips and friendship clubs. And although these activities look like just plain fun, the children are also introduced to new social skills — sharing, cooperation, patience and trust.

Their parents, who once believed it to be a "palace for rich people," are gradually coming to the "Y" themselves; a dozen of them, illiterate in Hebrew, study the language, much to the delight of their children.

Linda Levi, the programme's community organization worker, serves as a link among the neighbourhood, the schools and the YMHA. She conducts bi-monthly meetings where child-rearing and education are discussed and which are attended by mothers and fathers alike. She also visits them in their homes, as often as possible, and hopes to start a workshop in which they can be taught to play games with their children.

Its directors call Mifal Kai a success but they are realistic about its limited impact. "Whatever the children learn here," says Mr. Ben-Zion, "they must still return to their cramped and problem-filled homes. For each child in the programme, there are hundreds more who need help and we don't have the money or the volunteers to do the job." Some children do not respond to the tutoring and the academic progress of those who do has not yet been measured objectively. Researchers from the Hebrew University School of Social Work have asked to study the project.

Despite its shortcomings, most of those involved in Mifal Kai are enthusiastic. The children are active and eager; the school principals are planning to use some of its techniques in their own institutions; some parents are organizing a group to lobby the Ministry of Education for the funds needed to keep it going. The YMHA has budgetary problems which will prevent it from offering all these free services. Perhaps its best endorsement comes from a young volunteer: "I get the greatest feeling when a child who once begged, 'Please help me!' now says, 'You don't have to. I can do it myself.'"
